If this escapes the waste basket I will come again.

PEANUTS VS. PORK

The South Takes a Leaf From The West's Book of Prosperity.

Notwithstanding the difference between the prices paid for wheat, and corn, the latter commodity, by reason of its immense volume, yields to the country the largest gross income.

When the corn crop is unusually low, the western farmer prospers and in turn the railroads through his territory pay dividends; manufacturers make money and the commercial conditions generally are good.

It requires only a short memory to recall the time when corn, year after year, was burned for fuel, or allowed to rot ungathered in the fields. This was when corn was fed to cattle and meal entered very little into the diet list of man. The west used some corn, so did the south, but in the east it was almost unknown and Europeans regarded it as unfit for food.

The grit, determination and energy of the west was concentrated to conquer this condition and a united movement was engineered to instruct nonusers of corn how this important food product might be utilized.

Western exposition, state fairs, and county shows had corn palaces, and representatives were sent to the Atlantic seaboard and across the ocean, exhibiting at all the great centers corn and its products. Now, that the cereal is never burnt unless carelessness forgets her duty.

At the Jamestown Exposition the southerners have determined to emulate the wisdom of their western brethren and will erect an immense peanut palace where this excellent tuber will hold sway.

German chemist have recently proven the nutritive value of the soldier contains sausages made of peanuts. It is very nutritious, pleasing to the taste, and contains more units of food energy than a sausage of similar size made from pork.

The peanut as ordinarily used roasted is undoubtedly toothsome and gently soporific. Most mild cases of insomnia yield to a late supper of peanuts. In candy it is known to many, but its use is by no means general. Peanut butter, peanut brittle, ground peanuts for sandwiches, have a certain vogue, but it is restricted.

The by-products of peanuts are many and useful, yet, year after year, peanut planters use their plants as fertilizing material, cutting them down and plowing them under to enrich the earth.

The Peanut Palace of the Jamestown Exposition is intended, like the corn palaces of the west, to be not a final undertaking, but the beginning of a movement in bringing to the peanut its due mode of appreciation.
